INITIATIVE ATTACK

Our right to decide which initiatives we can vote on is under attack by four out of five Lane County commissioners. Pete Sorenson, the only attorney on the commission, understands that the county cannot legally weigh in on initiatives until after the new laws are passed. That this is a constitutionally protected provision of the initiative process is the argument Sorenson made to his fellow commissioners.

If Sid Leiken, Jay Bozevich, Faye Stewart and Pat Farr really want to save the taxpayers' money, they won't pass a law that, most certainly, will kick-off a lawsuit and land the county in court. Let's keep the pressure on our elected officials by contacting them. Tell them: "Hands off the people's business, executed through the initiative process!"

THE REAL DEVIL

It is very well known that Trump is an offensive piece of shit. So hatin' on him is a consuming passion, and Clinton gets a pass. Even though Clinton represents the mainstream management that embodies the disaster all around us.

Global warming daily produces more severe weather crises, species extinctions, galloping air, water and soil pollution and dozens of other results. Technology is swallowing everything, turning people into zombies unable to interact, and the constant rampage shootings show that mass society has erased community and spawns always more pathologies.

Trump is the devil, just as Bush was for many. But he's mainly a diversion from where we're really at today. Billions are spent to maintain the humiliating spectacle of no real change, no turn from the developing catastrophe.

BAD BLM PLAN

The Bureau of Lane Management (BLM) enacted a plan to increase logging 37 percent on our public forests in Western Oregon. They are not applying the best and most current forest biology and climate science.

In media coverage, there was little mention of global warming and the carbon these same forests sequester in very large amounts. There was also no conversation about the vast amounts of private forests that have been clearcut on the forests adjoining BLM lands, which fragments wildlife habitat in destructive and unsustainable ways.

The fact is, the vast majority of Oregonians wants our forests restored and preserved. The logging industry should be paying timber harvest taxes at levels similar to the states of Washington and California to supplement our county budgets. There are exciting alternatives for wood products such as Hempcrete, where you can build a home from hemp grown in four months on less than three acres of land.

Let's invest in sustainable businesses such as permaculture farming and design, solar and wind energy and resource conservation projects — something we can be proud of.

There are no jobs on a dead planet, and that is where we are currently headed at full speed.

YES ON 97

Enough is enough! The power of money and influence in collusion with corporate-controlled mainstream media is shaping what people think is true.

As a 70-year old grandmother, I am strong with purpose, caring about our children and grandchildren. Become informed about Measure 97 and share truth with voters. Oregon Center for Public Policy points out that corporations pay 6.7 percent of all Oregon income taxes today versus 18.5 percent paid 40 years ago, and are projected to pay 4.6 percent in 10 years, given the status quo.

About 3 percent of corporations will be affected by Measure 97, which means only .25 percent of one percent of businesses in the state will see their taxes go up. This will not result in higher costs for goods and services.

We have 2,000 fewer teachers than before the financial crises of 2008, even though enrollment has increased. Corporations were bailed out on the backs of our children, the most vulnerable in our society.

EDUCATION AND DEMOCRACY

Spirit of the Law

HOW MUCH DOES STANDARDIZED TESTING REALLY COST US?

There is the letter of the law, then there's the spirit. Rep. Lew Frederick, the Oregon House's only African American legislator, was the guiding force behind two new Oregon laws: HB 2655 (the testing opt-out bill of rights) and HB 2713 (the testing cost audit bill).

The spirit behind the two new laws is clear: To honestly examine the costs, both financial and otherwise, of the standardized testing that dominates Oregon education and to allow parents and students to make their own informed decisions about what kind of education is best for them.

HB 2713, the testing audit bill, directs school districts to report to the secretary of state by Sept. 15 on the impact of state tests on "instructional time, curricula, educators' exercise of professional judgment, budgets and administrative time and focus."

The state already knows how much it pays for the tests: It's $27 million a year. Yes, $27 million. Payments go mostly to AIR, the American Institutes for Research and to the British education conglomerate, Pearson.

The testing audit bill seeks to determine the many additional costs that school districts pay.

Here's the question: When responding to HB 2713, will local school districts consider all of the costs of high-stakes testing or will they minimize the total costs in order to minimize the growing movement questioning these tests? Will local districts respond to both the letter of the law and the spirit of the law?

Will local districts consider?

First, immediate costs

- Loss of instructional staff to school "testing coordinator" positions?
- Classroom time lost to test preparation?
- Loss of libraries and computer labs for months as they become testing centers?
- School counselors forced to focus on testing, not counseling?
- Staff meetings dominated by test preparation and logistics?
- Professional development workshops predominantly devoted to test prep?
- Loss of professional development to improve comprehensive education methods?
- Diminishing of electives, civics and social studies because they "aren't tested"?

Second, deeper, long term costs

- Narrowing of curriculum caused by teaching to the test?
- Tracking kids from an early age based only on test scores?
- Increased high school dropout caused by such labeling and tracking?
- Loss of teacher creativity from having to teach to the test?
- Creative teachers leaving due to excessive testing?
- Potential outstanding teachers not entering the profession?
- Loss of innovative school administrators due to excessive testing demands?
- Effect on local school boards as they become conduits for federal and state mandates, instead of focusing on what's best for their community?

Opponents of excessive testing believe that honest answers to these questions will reveal that the corporate, testing-based model of education has had a devastatingly expensive impact on students, families, teachers and local communities — in terms of education, finances, emotions and equal opportunity for low-income, minority, special education and English Language Learner students.

HB 2713 provides our local school districts with the opportunity to critically examine the effects of the corporate "reform" model of education, which relies on for-profit companies to make decisions about what's best for your child, without consulting teachers, parents or students.

Will local districts look deeply and, perhaps, re-examine some of their long-held support for the data-based model of learning? Will they respect the letter and the spirit of the law?

This fall — right away before the Sept. 15 deadline — ask your children's teachers how much these tests really cost them last year. Ask your principal, too. Tell your school board and superintendent now how you believe they should carry out the mandate of Lew Frederick's HB 2713, the standardized testing audit bill.

This is a test. Let's see how our local school districts answer the questions.

THIS MODERN WORLD

by TOM TOMORROW

Just as the visionary detractors warned, traffic has become horrendous. Sure, most of the time there is absolutely no delay, but sometimes I've been delayed up to 30 seconds, even a minute or two during rush hour. This is a terrible injustice nobody should have to endure!

And the naysayers were also correct when they predicted that drivers would avoid the congestion, severely hurting businesses on that stretch. Don't let the parking lots full of vehicles fool you; those businesses are dying out there! And all of this in the name of safety, inclusiveness and livability?

If we allow this new design to stand, Eugene's Cycling Industrial Complex will be empowered to redesign more outdated roadways, marginally slowing down traffic in other neighborhoods throughout this city.

I ask you citizens of Eugene: Is that the world that we want for our children?

LOVE 'EM TO DEATH

Today's 10 highest grossing box office releases are about animals, including Finding Dory, The Jungle Book, Zootopia, The Secret Life of Pets and Kung Fu Panda. Nearly half of our households include a dog and nearly 40 percent have a cat. Two-thirds of us view them as family members and cherish them accordingly. We love our animals to death.

Literally ...

For every cat, dog or other animal we love and cherish, we put 500 through months of caging, crowding, deprivation, mutilation and starvation before we take their very lives, cut their dead bodies into little pieces and shove those into our mouths. And that doesn't even include Dory and billions of her little friends, because we haven't figured out how to count individual aquatic animals that we grind up for human or animal feed.

The good news is that we have a choice every time we visit a restaurant or grocery store. We can choose live foods — yellow and green vegetables, legumes, fruits, nuts and grains as well as a rich variety of grain and nut-based meats and dairy products.

Or we can choose dead animals, their body parts and other products of their abuse.

What will it be?

Choose Your Battle

NO CANDIDATE WILL SAVE YOU, BUT SOME VOTES ARE BETTER THAN OTHERS

I'm not a fan of HRC. But I'm no Bernie-for-the-revolution person either. No election will bring us the revolution we need. Even electing Jill Stein or Sanders would do the same as electing the "Hope" and "Change" of Obama.

The ball is still in our court. And Hillary Clinton is not the same as Trump. I much rather fight the Clinton administration than the Trump administration.

That's why I vote for whom I vote. I vote for who I will have to struggle and fight against. I rather fight against a centrist Supreme Court rather than a right wing court. I rather fight against Clinton appointees rather than Trump partisans from the GOP.

I'm not excited about HRC. And I donated to Sanders, (and Stein) but frankly, he's too far right for me (and so is she). But I know I'll never have a candidate I really like because that's not what elections are for.

That's what organizing is for. That's why I'll vote strategically but organize for four years. That's why my vote matters, but not as much as what I do for the rest of those years.

Don't try to tell me, "That's why we don't have third parties," because you and I know that's not how this system was designed. We have a system designed to thwart real direct democracy via voting. We have a system designed to have only two parties. Not coalitions. There won't be any third parties for long. We can't vote our way out of this mess anyhow, even if we had a dozen choices.

But that's why we have to keep on fighting using our freedom of assembly, freedom of speech, and talking to our neighbors and knocking on doors right now.

We have a lot work to do. Many of our neighbors plan to vote Trump. We have to talk to them and change their minds. This isn't something that you need to sign up for. This isn't something that we need to wait for our "political leaders" to show us the way. This is you talking to someone else about politics. This is democracy. This is direct action.

I can't help HRC run a better campaign. I'm legit worried she'll screw this up. But that's not my role. I wish HRC was an actual leftist. Frankly, Bernie was no savior either. We cannot win that battle electorally, ever. That's the battle we win in the years interim to an election.

But this isn't about her. This is about the landscape under which we will have to organize and fight back. This is important and even though I am opposed to much/most(?) of Clinton's policies (both Clintons) my vote never means I agree with any candidate. Because I'll always be fighting. Always. Because even good candidates need us to fight.

Because without that organizing, we will never ever get what we need. No candidate will ever save you. And we will always need to fight back. I may not ever be "with her"; but as long as this race is tight, I'll work to get her to win.

LETTERS

during her primary campaign in 2008. She lost that primary, but she won on healthcare, because when Obama became president he picked up the torch and passed Hillary's plan as the Affordable Care Act.

Bernie is smart. If he can't get into the presidency through the front door, he will get his policies in through the side door. He has Hillary's ear because so many of us showed that we support him. If we want to continue our momentum, we can tell Bernie to keep fighting for us, to keep pushing Hillary in the right direction.

There is only one presidential candidate who listens to Bernie Sanders and moves her platform closer to his goals: Hillary Clinton. Like it or not, she is our best shot.

MY NAME IS KESEY

Downtown Eugene's central square is known by just about everyone as Kesey Square. Even much of the city of Eugene's own published literature refers to the location as Kesey Square. Almost no one today refers to it by its official, dull and uninspiring name, Broadway Plaza (ugh!).

There are other Broadway Plazas around the country, but only one Kesey Square here in Eugene. Peter Helzer's wonderful sculpture of Ken Kesey reading to his grandchildren has become a unique destination and central way-finding marker in our downtown.

We are asking that you write and tell your city councilor and our mayor that you would like them to change the name officially from Broadway Plaza (boring!) to Kesey Square.

Changing the name now would only be an acknowledgement of what has already occurred naturally, and it would be an appropriate recognition of an unique figure in Northwest art and culture.

Cary Thompson & Jerry Diethelm
Friends of Kesey Square

GLOBAL WARMING

If grassroots activism causes local or state governments to take action fighting global warming, elected officials at all levels of government can take note of voters' concern about the problem.

But Congress must take effective measures to fight global warming, since President Obama's regulations are inadequate (see The Economist magazine, June 7, 2014). The Paris agreement of December 2015 was weak, because the U.S. offer was based on the regulations.

Citizens' Climate Lobby (CCL) headquarters is optimistic about Congress passing global warming legislation in 2017. In February 2016, two South Florida representatives, Rep. Carlos Curbelo (R-FL) and Rep. Ted Deutch (D-FL), founded the bipartisan Climate Solutions Caucus, which contains an equal number of Republican and Democratic congressional representatives. The caucus will serve to advance the discussion in Congress.

CCL likes to call its revenue-neutral carbon tax proposal "carbon fee and dividend," since it would not be a tax in the conventional sense; all the money would go back to households equally, except a small amount for administration.

Please tell friends and family about CCL. Because of the need to win over Republicans, people living in conservative areas of the U.S. are particularly important.

BLM'S NEW FLAWED FOREST PLAN

Like a horror movie zombie, the logging plan for about 2.5 million acres of Oregon's public forests known as the "Whopper" is back, and within days of its Aug. 5 announcement, enviros and the timber industry filed lawsuits against it.

The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) is calling its plan to cut 278 million board feet of timber per year off Oregon's federal forests "Resource Management Plans (RMPs) for Western Oregon." But Susan Jane Brown, an attorney with the Western Environmental Law Center, which together with Earthjustice is representing about 22 conservation groups in their lawsuit against the plan, calls it "WOPR junior."

The groups include in their argument that most of the timber would come from clearcut logging, streamside protections are cut in half or more and climate change is not addressed seriously enough.

The WOPR, which stands for Western Oregon Plan Revisions, was a logging plan for BLM lands that was proposed in 2008 and after years of litigation, it died away in 2012. The WOPR would have increased logging on old forests by 400 percent. After the WOPR died, the BLM returned to the 1994 Northwest Forest Plan (NWFP) for forest management that had helped calm the "forest wars" of the 1980s and '90s.

"It is certainly serving to reignite some of the forest wars most of us hoped had been put to bed by the Northwest Forest Plan," Brown says of the RMPs.

She tells EW, "These lands have already been squeezed pretty hard; you can't go back to that well endlessly."

The American Forest Resources Council, a timber industry group suing because it wants more logging than the RMPs call for, says the "BLM is capable of producing 400 million board feet of timber per year."

According to the BLM, 81 percent of the lands it administers in the planning area are Oregon and California Railroad Revested Lands (O&C Lands). Logging on these lands historically generated money for Oregon counties, including Lane. Lane County Board of Commissioners voted in February to join a lawsuit against the BLM with the Association of O&C Counties. Commissioner Pete Sorenson voted against it.

Doug Heiken of Oregon Wild, one of the conservation groups suing over the plan, says, "Old-growth forests deserve the highest level of protection, but BLM's new plan adopts a number of new loopholes and excuses that will allow logging in 'protected' old forests." He says that the NWFP called for "rigorous science before allowing such logging" but that research was "never started let alone completed."

Brown says the NWFP addressed the legal demands of the Endangered Species Act and other laws that protect species such as the northern spotted owl in a complex way that the new plan does not. "Do we need to step up conservation efforts?" she asks. "Possibly. But how to do that and increase timber harvest by 37 percent?" The Western Environmental Law Center says that the BLM's 37-percent increase "could boost carbon emissions and make the forest less resilient to climate change and other disturbance."

While climate change may not have been as looming as a concern in the early '90s as it is now, Brown says the BLM's new plan is "anemic" in its response to a warming planet. "Those BLM forests are definitely carbon sequesters" she says, with the "capacity to sequester lots and lots of carbon, but where rubber meets the road is in those big old trees."

Sarah Levy, BLM spokeswoman for the RMPs, says she cannot comment on the pending litigation, but in terms of the plan itself, she says the RMPs are not WOPR Junior, but an "entirely new plan." On climate change, she points to an analysis of the plan by the Interagency Working Group on Social Cost of Carbon that she calls "complex" and says the "BLM will increase net carbon 32 percent over current levels."

Brown also critiques the RMPs' reduction of riparian buffers, which limit how close to a stream trees can be cut down. "The BLM is focused on shrinking riparian buffers because under their view we don't need larger buffers for fish," she says. Trees provide shade and woody debris that keep water cool and provide habitat for salmon and other species.

Levy says while "management direction for the riparian reserves directs the BLM to protect fish and water, and is silent on terrestrial species" such as salamanders, "that doesn't mean that terrestrial species don't receive protection." She says findings of "no jeopardy" and "not likely to adversely modify" biological opinions from the Fish and Wildlife Service and National Marine Fisheries mean that "BLM is adequately protecting fish, water and wildlife under this plan."

Oregon's lands need "more care and feeding" that they would get under the RMPs, Brown says. ■

POLICE DATA ON RACE IN LANE COUNTY DIFFICULT TO TRACK

A blistering report by the U.S. Justice Department finds that “the Baltimore Police Department for years has hounded black residents who make up most of the city’s population, systematically stopping, searching and arresting them, often with little provocation or rationale,” The New York Times reports.

Racial bias here in Lane County is trickier to track. In the wake of recent Black Lives Matter protests and police shootings of African-Americans, EW contacted the Eugene Police Department, the Lane County Sheriff’s Office and Springfield police to get an idea of how race is tracked in this area in interactions with law enforcement.

The answer is that it’s not tracked very much at all.

As of July 2015, Lane County has an African-American population of just 1.1 percent, compared to 13.3 percent nationally, and Oregon is 2.1 percent African-American. According to a July report by The Sentencing Project, in Oregon one in 21 of all African-American adult males was in prison in 2014.

In its analysis of U.S. Justice Department data, The Sentencing Project found that African-Americans are incarcerated more than whites by a ratio of 5.6 to 1, slightly higher than the national average.

Here in Lane County, Sgt. Carrie Carver with the Lane County Sheriff’s office says that the sheriff’s office doesn’t track race when it comes to arrests and police contacts.

EW put in a public records request with Springfield for its contacts, arrests and incarcerations, which the police department is in the process of responding to, however interim Police Chief Rick Lewis tells EW, while arrests and use of force are tracked, if a person is pulled over or police make a contact but don’t arrest or cite the person that information is not tracked.

Lewis says that from his perspective, if people are pulled over for a traffic stop but not cited, being asked what race they are might seem offensive or lead to the impression a ticket is given or not given based on race.

In Eugene, EPD’s public information officer Melinda McLaughlin says the police officially began testing an iPhone app on Dec. 1, 2015, that would collect traffic stop data. She says, “A group of 12 of our officers collected data for six months to test the app.”

After six months, McLaughlin says EPD assessed the app for needed changes and continued testing for another six months. “We will next decide how to roll out the collection technology for the rest of the department. The project in 2015 focused solely on data collection technology as the first step.”

And according to the most recent 2013 police use of force review by the Eugene police auditor, “We found no pattern among individual officers using force against minorities.”

Eric Richardson, Eugene-Springfield NAACP president, says the issue of tracking race has kind of gotten the runaround, but he knows EPD Chief Pete Kerns has it “on his radar and moving in that direction.”

Richardson also points to House Bill 2002, which passed in the Oregon Legislature in July 2015, as another positive step. The bill directs law enforcement agencies to adopt written policies and procedures prohibiting profiling by Jan. 1, 2016.

At the same time, Richardson says, “There’s a lot to be desired when it comes to the interactions with people of color.” And he’d like to see race “as an issue that gets dealt with promptly as opposed to being on the bottom of the pile.”

He says that the juvenile justice system tracks race a little better, “and if we go by that there is disproportionate contact” locally and statewide. ■

LINDA BURDEN-WILLIAMS

“I started guitar lessons in third grade,” says Linda Burden-Williams, who grew up in Marysville, Washington, and played bass guitar for 15 years in Puget Sound-area rock bands. “Shady Lady, She, Ship of Fools, City Slicker,” she enumerates. “We changed names regularly. We played music on the road, six months at a time. We traveled with eight people, two dogs and a monkey in a school bus with a VW van on top.”

The bus is where she met her husband of 36 years, Gary Williams. In the early 1980s, Burden-Williams took an acting class at the Northwest Actors Studio in Seattle.

“The first day, I felt like I was home,” she says. “It was a safe place where I could express all my emotions.” She had roles in several plays at the Actors Studio, then studied camera acting, and has since appeared in many network TV shows and independent movies. After the birth of their son, Garrick, the family moved to Veneta when Gary was offered a job in Eugene. On trips to New York or L.A. for work or education, Burden-Williams brought Garrick along and homeschooled him in a hotel room. In the mid-1990s, she began to offer acting classes at home in Veneta.

“I started with my son and his friends from school,” she says. A few years later, she moved her business, In Focus Camera Acting and Production, to a classroom in Eugene, where she teaches and coaches public speaking as well as camera acting. Her credits as a casting director include The American Gandhi, chosen as best film at last year’s Eugene International Film Festival.

• While we welcome the recent re-embracing of long-form journalism, we weren’t impressed by The Oregonian’s recent and massive “Firestorm” piece. Fire is a huge concern in Oregon, but The O put thousands of words into laying blame on how the Malheur National Forest attacked last year’s Canyon Complex fires on Oregon’s east side, accusing firefighters of being timid, rather than examining how climate change and a lack of fire let those fires get so big in the first place. The life of a firefighter — usually a young man or woman — is more valuable than anyone’s home or ranch. Aug. 13, a member of Lolo Hotshots, Justin Beebe, 26, was killed fighting a fire in Nevada. Did The O miss the point? Aggressive fire suppression over the years caused these large blazes. We need to care for our forests better, not ask young people to take more chances than they already are to protect private property built into forestland.

We don’t want him here, especially after reading Nicholas Kristof in The New York Times Sunday, Aug. 14. Kristof, an Oregonian, writes how even the students in Forest Grove High School reflect the hatred and fear Trump is spewing about immigrants and “others.”

FORMER BUNDY ATTORNEY TALKS TO TEA PARTIERS ABOUT THE CONSTITUTION

Local attorney Michael Arnold was the guest speaker at the monthly 9-12 Project Lane County meeting discussing constitutional law Aug. 9.

Arnold is known for his high-profile cases such as defending mixed martial artist Gerald Strebendt in his murder trial and briefly becoming Ammon Bundy's attorney after traveling to the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge during its occupation earlier this year.

9-12 is a conservative chapter of a national group founded by Glenn Beck in 2009. The 9-12 Project is a Tea Party group that focuses on "building and uniting our communities back to the place we were on 9/12/2001, united as Americans, standing together to protect the greatest nation ever created." The local chapters still meet regularly on the second Tuesday of the month at Izzy's Pizza & Buffet in Eugene.

The meeting of about 20 people began with a prayer and the Pledge of Allegiance while a projector played a slideshow alternating between anti-liberal cartoons and quotes from historical figures such as Karl Marx and Andrew Jackson mostly speaking about national security.

After the prayer and pledge, members were encouraged to stand up and share their thoughts about the past month. Most of the two dozen people in the room who spoke talked about the Democratic National Convention, questioning why "illegal aliens are allowed to speak at a national convention" and "inviting the mothers of criminals to speak."

Once everyone had spoken, Arnold talked for nearly two hours about constitutional law. He focused on the Bundy's occupation of the refuge near Burns. Arnold's talk mainly educated 9-12 members about constitutional law and answered questions about the government's rights and motives.

According to an email sent out notifying 9-12 members of the talk, "Michael is a supporter of the U.S. Constitution in it's [sic] original intent."

The Malheur protest's long-term goal was to transfer federal lands to private ownership or local government control. The U.S. government owns 47 percent of all land in the West and a majority of the land in Oregon, according to The New York Times.

Arnold spoke about the enclave clause of the Constitution that states, "All Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings."

The Bundys argued that the federal government's ownership of the Malheur refuge is a violation of the Constitution. The 26 defendants in the case are set to face trial in September. One of the ringleaders, Jon Ritzheimer, pled guilty to conspiring with Ammon Bundy and others to prevent Interior Department employees from doing their jobs at the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge.

As Arnold spoke, 9-12 members asked questions on topics ranging from 2nd Amendment rights to border security. When one member asked why logging rights are being prohibited, Arnold outlined the difference between the laws in National Forests and those on land owned by the Bureau of Land Management.

Arnold discussed the constitutional rights of each situation posed by the members and laid out the reasons why the federal government does or doesn't have authority in certain situations.

He usually came to the conclusion that the federal government is overstepping its bounds.

"You don't have to bow down to our government slavemasters," Arnold said. ■

Black Market Pot After Legalization

BY RICK LEVIN

After the fireworks, there's still the smoke. The legalization of retail weed in Oregon — a real Fourth of July moment for pot-heads — has left in its wake an enduring fug of legal, political and commercial questions that can make prohibition look like a cheerful stroll to the neighborhood dealer in comparison.

One of the major selling points for going legal, at least from the legislative standpoint, was the notion that hauling weed aboveboard would put the screws to the black market, eventually paralyzing all the criminal shenanigans that come with the illegal distribution of drugs. According to this argument, the commodification and careful regulation of marijuana would starve out the underground, taking pot off the streets and out of the hands of thugs, gangbangers and evil cartels.

Like so many issues surrounding weed in Oregon, the impact of legalization on the so-called black market remains to be seen. It's complicated. A causal survey of smokers in Eugene revealed to EW that many people are indeed now buying their smoke at dispensaries — surprising, perhaps, because the general sentiment prior to legalization was that underground weed would remain cheaper and better, keeping most established smokers tapping the black market.

As someone who's spent half her life in the underground marijuana industry, Bronwynn Dean says the idea that legalization will wipe out the black market is absurd. Dean, a Eugene writer (and occasional EW contributor) currently penning a collection of essays about her weed experiences, says an industry that's existed for decades won't simply go away because the product is now being taxed and stamped for stores.

"I'm talking about the guys that are moving multiple pounds on the regular," she explains. "I'm not talking about the dime bag. The guys that started growing 20 years ago got into it for a reason, and whatever reason that may be, it definitely has nothing to do with wanting to comply with authority."

The previously existing underground market is alive and well, Dean says, and she makes the important distinction between illicit dealers and folks producing and moving large quantities of weed. "None of them are ready to sign up to get their shit tagged and searched and all of the above. That's not why they do it."

Dean explains that the cost alone of going legit is prohibitive to this "good-old-boy network" of growers who have been producing quality weed for a long, long time. "I do know some major players who considered the cost of licensing and all the shit they have to jump through,"

she says of the process of going retail. "The cost alone, it's designed to drive down their profit and they're going to have to cut costs, and the shit's not going to be as good."

What's more, she says, most of the marijuana grown in Oregon is being sent out of state. "I would say that 90 percent of what's being grown here is getting shipped," Dean says.

Adam Jacques of Oregon Microgrowers Guild echoes Dean's sentiments. Jacques, an award-winning medical pot grower who will soon open a dispensary in Eugene, says that so long as retail pot remains illegal at the federal level as well as in most states, the black market will continue to exist. "Nationally, the black market's going to be a thing for a while," he explains. "There are always going to be states that require a large amount of cannabis that takes care of the people in that state who want cannabis. Weed from here goes everywhere."

As a medical marijuana provider who's also entering the retail market, Jacques points out that he's meticulous in following the legal requirements, down to counting every seed he produces and installing fencing and surveillance cameras. "There's no way that anybody who's working the regulatory system can get away with illegally selling stuff," he explains.

That said, Jacques says he believes everyone from consumers to growers and distributors will continue to move weed on the down low. “I don’t think you’re going to stop the black market growers from growing. They’ve been doing it so far and haven’t gotten caught,” he says, adding that buyers as well will “continue to use their same channels — one, it’s cheaper, and you’ve been smoking that weed for the past 20 years.”

— BRONWYNN DEAN, UNDERGROUND CANNABIS INDUSTRY VETERAN

Not necessarily so, says Mark A. R. Kleiman, professor of public policy at New York University’s Marron’s Institute of Urban Management. Kleiman, one of the nation’s leading experts on the impact of legalization and co-author of the book Marijuana Legalization: What Everyone Needs to Know, says that when it comes to legalization and the black market, it helps to take the long view.

“The black market’s not going to disappear the day after legalization, and it’s not going to exist five years later,” he says. He points out that in states that have had “wide-open medical marijuana” such as California, “you already had the black market eaten away.”

Other factors eroding the black market, Kleiman says, are the increased productivity of higher quality bud allowed by legal grows, which removes shortages in supply that states like Oregon and Colorado suffered after pot first went legal. Also, he adds, “as illegal production and retailing capacity comes on line, prices fall.”

When it comes to legal weed and the black market, Kleiman suggests drawing comparisons with the end of alcohol prohibition, and how that played out over time. “There’s no moonshining,” he says, “and it’s not because we do enforcement.” Market factors are at work here: First, it’s cheaper to make booze in breweries. There’s also the issue of branding.

“If people’s identity is bound up in the fact that they drink Coors instead of Bud, moonshining’s sort of irrelevant,” Kleiman says. “If the cannabis industry generates brands, they create a generation of consumers.” And, like drinkers, weed smokers will have a choice among a wide range of marijuana in terms of price, quality and quantity. For instance, Kleiman points out Uncle Ike’s in Colorado, which offers a strong budget bud at $95 an ounce — essentially, the malt liquor of weed.

“The budget bud is all outdoor grow,” he says. “That’s going to squeeze the market pretty hard. The illicit dealers are basically whistling in the graveyard.”

On the legal side, Kleiman says, the idea that legalization would get law enforcement out of the criminal market is “backwards” in terms of what it will take to eliminate the black market. “If there are parallel licit and illicit markets, then arresting illegal dealers is exactly how you grow the legal market,” he says. “The illicit cannabis market is a paper tiger, but it won’t fall over unless somebody pushes.”

Overall, Kleiman says that “the illicit market is a transitional phenomenon,” though so long as legalization remains a changing reality from state to state — federally, weed is scheduled alongside heroin as a criminal substance — the black market in interstate trade will exist. “There’s nothing about legalization that changes that,” he says. “My guess is that most of the Oregon-grown was going out of state to start with, and that won’t change at all.”

Reefer Festival Madness

Did cannabigotry kill HempFest 2016?

BY BEN RICKER

'POT ACTIVIST IS AN OXYMORON,' JOKES
EMERALD EMPIRE
HEMPFEST FOUNDER

The funny thing is, this time last year Emerald Empire HempFest founder Dan “DanK” Koozer was ready to call it quits.

The 71-year-old pot activist launched Eugene’s annual cannabis celebration in 2003. With help from volunteers, Koozer — who hosts the weekly public access talk show Eugene Cannabis TV — lines up vendors, books three days of live music and arranges educational lectures. He even sets up a temporary employment agency for folks looking to join the state’s burgeoning cannabis industry.

Putting it all together is a yearlong logistical headache.

For a free, family-friendly ganja-appreciation party wrangled solely by a weathered Deadhead, Emerald Empire HempFest has gone off with very few hitches over the years. Koozer fronts the money for the whole shebang out of his social security checks. Only in the last couple years has HempFest operated in the black.

It’s been a long, strange trip, and Koozer’s had just about enough.

But when city officials threatened last year to deny HempFest its park permits, Koozer felt a renewed sense of purpose take him over.

“I can’t let HempFest go out like that,” Koozer says.

Despite his best efforts, July came and went and Eugene’s midsummer marijuana jamboree never materialized. The city denied Koozer’s application for the use of Maurie Jacobs Parks — HempFest’s home for the last six years — and shut him down again at a public hearing in March.

Koozer tried appealing the city’s ruling in Eugene’s municipal court, to no avail.

“They ran out the clock,” Koozer says. “We never got our day in court.”

The city blames Koozer, saying he screwed up big time last year when he violated the conditions of HempFest’s special park-use permit.

Heads of the park department sat down with Koozer in the weeks following HempFest 2015 to count the ways he’d run afoul of his agreement with the city. Specifically, former Eugene Parks and Open Spaces Operations Supervisor Richard Zucker grumbled that Koozer failed to post signs around Maurie Jacobs Park indicating that smoking pot at HempFest was strictly forbidden.

According to notes Zucker kept from their meeting, Zucker himself caught a strong whiff of burning reefer in the air on the last day of the celebration. Zucker followed his nose to a vendor’s booth near HempFest’s north entrance belonging to Clackamas-based seed company Stoney Girl Gardens; signs in the park because it keeps the party accessible to those without cars. Plus, the money he saves not having to rent a private venue keeps costs down, allowing HempFest to remain free.

On a larger level, Koozer finds it highly suspect that city officials suddenly clamped down tighter on his permit access as Oregon’s legal restrictions ease up and marijuana becomes more mainstream.

Koozer appealed the decision in front of city hearings of official Gary Darnielle but lost again.

Koozer says the city violated HempFest’s constitutional rights and is behaving like heavy-handed “cannabigot” reactionaries who, perhaps for its fringe lefty reputation, reject the freedom culture that surrounds pot.

City of Eugene community relations director Jan Bohman says HempFest’s permit denial had nothing whatsoever to do with the fact that we’re talking about a marijuana-centric good time.

“That’s bullshit,” attorney Brian Michaels says.

Michaels, who represented HempFest pro bono at the March 7 hearing, says that the city held Koozer to an unreasonable standard.

“It’s impossible to expect Dan to keep everyone present obeying the law,” he says. “One-hundred percent crime-free compliance is an impossible standard.”

Try thinking of a world in which the Festival of Eugene or concerts at the Cuthbert were held to the same supreme ideal and shut down after the first hint of pot smoke. “It’s clear to me there’s no consistent lawful basis to refuse [Koozer’s] permit,” Michaels says.

Bohman wouldn’t respond when asked whether or not the city imposes a double standard on HempFest.

Be that as it may, the city won this round and the summer of ’16 floats by without its regularly scheduled HempFest.

But Koozer’s not giving up. If he raises enough money to cover the legal bills, he intends to fight this all the way to the top.

“We are freedom fighters first,” Koozer says, “show promoters second.”

reading “Smoking Tent” and “15-minute limit” hung outside the flaps.

Koozer denies Zucker’s claim that he knew all along about the informal smoking den.

Both agree, however, that Koozer shut it down immediately after Zucker complained.

Regardless, the damage was done.

“I reminded Dan,” Zucker’s report says, “that by his own admission the smoking of marijuana was not legal on public property and that I would recommend denial of a HempFest permit application for next year because he had violated the terms of his 2015 permit.”

Zucker hoped his warning would give Koozer “ample time to make plans for next year and find an event venue somewhere other than on city of Eugene property.”

For his part, Koozer won’t be turned away. It’s vital to the HempFest ethos, he says, that the festival take place in a pub-

The Secrets of Successful Stoners

An interview with
Weed author
David Schmader

BY KELSEY ANNE RANKIN

If renowned astrophysicist and admitted pot smoker Carl Sagan could toke up before expanding our grasp of the known universe, who's to say you can't lead a successful career while relishing the latest indica strain?

Weed: The User's Guide — A 21st Century Handbook for Enjoying Marijuana author David Schmader, who wrote at Seattle's alt weekly The Stranger for 15 years — and has penned three plays and recorded an annotated version of Paul Verhoeven's Showgirls that has a cult following all to itself — tells Eugene Weekly how to find the sweet spot of being a successful stoner without the lazy, dropout stigma stopping you from achieving your fully baked dreams.

Would you consider yourself a successful stoner?

Yeah, yes. I would think so. I got paid to write a book about something I love and that is controversial. There's still such a weird stigma about it.

Where do you think the lazy, dropout stoner stereotype originated from?

I think it was the racism. It was like another way to say, "Mexicans are lazy. They love this weed that makes them lazy." It was such a crude maneuver: A non-white culture moves to America, so you criminalize something that is specific to their culture. The thing I hate is the idea that it's a weak escape from actual life. I feel like if you're someone who it agrees with, it can be a really great crutch and fast-track to being present.

What's the difference between someone who's just stoned at work versus a successful stoner?

I think someone who can enjoy it exactly as you would enjoy alcohol, and not be an alcoholic about it. Instead of, "I live in high land all the time and now that's normal." I mean, where do you go for fun when your pleasure is normal?

What would your list of steps to success for stoners look like?

Ugh, set a budget. Set a schedule and set times. With alcohol, I feel like we all learned about happy hour and "quit-tin' time" — there's a social structure. With weed, it's something that most people learn about with peers in junior high behind a dumpster. Just treat it like booze. You're robbing it of its specialness if you turn it into "all day every day."

Do you know any successful stoners personally?

Oh yeah, yeah. There are surgeons, New York Times best-selling authors and business owners. And a ton of really good parents that are not shy about partially crediting their familiarity to weed — especially around young kids. I mean, what grown up wants to go play with a truck in the park for an hour? A stoned parent.

Do you think that smoking weed and having a successful career is a privilege? The McDonald's worker probably doesn't have as much leeway as Mark Zuckerberg.

Yeah, you kind of have to luck your way into it. I had to be in a creative job to be able to have the life I've had, which is definitely a privilege. That would be terrifying if the market crashed — I'd have to stop smoking weed to get into half of the decent jobs.

Why do you think that smoking herb makes employment more difficult?

I think it's tied to the stereotype that it's not an equivalent of alcohol — as something you can enjoy as an adult pleasure — but it's a statement on your way of living in the world. It also means you're willing to break a law in most states. I grew up when drag was illegal, and if you're gay, you know that some laws are just not respectable. You have to translate them to your own experience.

Is being stoned a hindrance in some careers?

Absolutely. Everyone reacts to it differently. Like any intoxicant, relaxant or escape, you just have to keep your priorities and be honest with yourself about what's being lost. Especially with weed — it's more subtle. It's not, "I lost my home, I lost my job, I lost my teeth." It's, "Oh, I don't return phone calls very well."

Does weed have benefits for the workaholic?

Oh yeah. People don't have much time to get their grooves on or settle into their non-work mode. Weed is a come-down. Just try weed. Give it a try, and you'll know right away whether you like it or not.

How to do you feel about the advice, "Go to an interview stoned, so your employer thinks you're always like that?"

Ahhhhh! That seems pretty high-wirey. That's the kind of thing where you're planning your life around a pleasure. That would be a red flag for me, kind of like getting a second job to support your weed habits is a red flag. Don't go to your interview high.

Which successful stoner would you want to smoke with, and which successful person do you think could really just use a joint?

If he were still alive, I'd really love to smoke with Carl Sagan. Before election season came, I would have smoked with Susan Sarandon, but now I'm mad at her about her Bernie stuff, so I don't want to get high with her anymore. And, ugh, I would say Trump [needs to smoke a joint], but I really don't want to feed into his mania.

Unanswered questions hang in the air around Eugene's proposed pot sales tax

BY SARA SACKS

Contrary to Oregon's generally retail-tax-free-and-proud lifestyle, Eugeneans pay sales tax on four common purchases: alcohol, tobacco, gasoline and pot.

Since recreational pot sales went legit last year, Oregonians pay a whopping 25 percent state sales tax on recreational marijuana.

Ballot Measure 91, the bill that originally approved the sale of recreational marijuana, creates the Oregon Marijuana Account and allots percentages of the taxes from marijuana sales to the Common School Fund; mental health, alcohol and drug abuse treatment programs; state and local law enforcement; and the Oregon Health Authority.

Come 2017, the state tax drops to 17 percent, and Eugene then has the option to levy an additional three percent local tax — meaning consumers could wind up paying a combined 20 percent tax on their bud purchases.

This local tax is due for the ballot in November, when Eugene voters will approve or deny the initiative.

Eugene joins Portland, Salem, Bend and a list of other Oregon cities in considering a local tax.

"We're even late to the conversation," says Eugene City Councilor Claire Syrett, who recently proposed the vote.

Syrett says even a small local tax on recreational marijuana could help heal a city still limping along after the recession that started almost 10 years ago.

"During the recession in particular we had to make some pretty hard choices," Syrett says. As always, priority went to Eugene's fire and police services, while departments like the Parks and Open Space Division bore the brunt of the city's austerity measures.

Even still, City Councilor George Brown gives the proposed tax a thumbs-down, calling it a "sin tax." Brown argues that it will push some consumers back to the black market. Furthermore, taxing pot, Brown says, plays on the continuing and misguided social stigma that surrounds marijuana use.

Syrett says she didn't propose this tax in order to target anyone specifically. She urges recreational marijuana users to "feel as if they're contributing to something positive."

Projections for yearly revenue from the local tax are all over the board. The city's estimates start at $200,000. But according to a cannabis industry representative with whom Syrett spoke, the city could rake in $1 million annually, she says.

Brown's other concern is that it's currently unclear how the tax money will be spent. Unlike with Measure 91, the proposed marijuana tax does not specify revenue distribution. What's more, local law does not require tax revenue to be spent on programs relating to the object of taxation.

Mayor Kitty Piercy is in favor of the council's decision to call for a vote but, like Brown, wants a clearer idea of where the money would go.

The tax "needs to be clearly dedicated to specific community needs and purposes and held accountable, so that the public can clearly know what it will pay for," Piercy says.

City councilors did not have time before their summer recess to hammer out the distribution of funds, Syrett tells EW. As it stands, revenue would flow directly into Eugene's General Fund, in the event that voters approve the tax. The city would then have complete discretion over the revenue, regardless of what voters want.

If the bill passes, the tax will go into effect January 2017, and will be on the books permanently. At that point, the Eugene City Council could propose amendments specifically detailing the allotment of revenue.

Proposed sales taxes are typically a non-starter in Oregon, but neither Brown nor Syrett would venture to guess which way the wind will blow this November.

The Lane Arts Council hosts its 3rd Mural Bike Tour 10 am to noon Saturday, Aug. 20, spinning off at the Whiteaker Carpark South (5th Alley and Blair Boulevard). The 2-mile ride around the Whit and downtown Eug will visit about 15 murals with several artists on hand to discuss their work including Ron Lafond, Valentina Gonzalez, Hans d'Hollosy, Jim Evangelista, Ila Rose, Kari Johnson, Jordan Schaefer-Limbach and visiting Los Angeles muralist Beau Stanton.

Stanton is in town creating the second mural at the McDonald Theatre for the city of Eugene's 20X21 EUG Mural Project, which is commissioning 20-plus murals by local and international artists to spiff up the town and promote art diplomacy for the 2021 IAAF World Championships. Brazil's Acidum Project art collective painted the first mural earlier this summer on the east wall of Cowfish Dance Club downtown, a mural that will also be on the bike tour. Visit lanearts.org/mural-bike-tour for details.

Meanwhile, the Whiteaker Community Art Team announced its second call to artists to paint murals on the remaining walls of the Whiteaker Carpark South, next to the one Ila Rose completed in July. Contact whiteakermurals@gmail.com for details.

And Bayne Gardner, perhaps the most prolific local muralist ever, just completed an extra-long, candy-colored pup mural for the Lovable Dog Rescue shelter. It is only one of many Gardner completed this summer; follow his Instagram account @baynegardner for fantastic time-lapsed videos of his art.

This year, unfortunately, is prime for a show called Dead Rockstars: A Tribute to the Mortal Gods of Sound what with the passing of Prince, David Bowie and Glenn Frey — not to mention the death of Motörhead's Lemmy Kilmister in December. Print house Blunt Graffix hosts the group show featuring the work of artists from across the U.S. Look for a gun-toting Bowie and Amy Winehouse getting the Andy Warhol treatment 6 to 10 pm Saturday, Aug. 20, and 11 am to 4 pm Sunday, Aug. 21, at 3709 W. 1st Avenue.

Local graphic designer and visual artist Rogene Manas has a book coming out Sept. 14 through North Light Books. Artful Paper Clay: Techniques for Adding Dimension to Your Art is a how-to guide for upping your paper clay (also known as fiber clay) game by combining it with paint, collage and other mixed media. Manas will host a book signing and demonstration in September; details TBA.

Oregon Cultural Trust makes it rain: This month it is awarding a record-breaking $2.9 million to nonprofits statewide. Local recipients include: Lane Arts Council's Fiesta Cultural Latino culture festival [$10,926]; Shelton McMurphey Johnson House preservation [$21,140]; Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art preservation [$22,568]; Cascadia Concert Opera [$5,000]; Delgani String Quartet [$8,389], Eugene Symphony [$8,910]; Oregon Mozart Players' hiring of an education coordinator [$16,133]; Cottage Grove Historical Society for "the commissioning of an original score for the silent film The General and a tour with live music for the film's 90th anniversary" [$8,895]; Corvallis Arts Center's 2017 Microbiomes — Seeing the Unseen art and science exhibit [$12,069]; Benton County Historical Society for a new museum building in Philomath [$40,000].

AFRAID OF THE DARK

Bad things happen in the shadows in Lights Out

It goes without saying that horror, strictly speaking, is not among cinema's most expansive genres. Most times, it's as conservative and formulaic as porn, and its requisite elements are as familiar as a bowl of chicken noodle soup.

But certainly, within the category of scary movies, there is room to move. Some horror films are like an amusement park, mechanical but titillating; many of them are as carnal and precisely grotesque as an autopsy; some are boiled in the biblical evil of the Old Testament; and yet others are atmospheric and dreadful, seeking to drive your fear inward toward the deeper ruts of suspicion and paranoia.

Lights Out, the feature-film debut of David F. Sandberg, belongs distinctly in the amusement-park category of horror. It is, frame by frame, a fright fest, and it goes about its business of making you jump with the orthodox devotion and ritualized aplomb of a nun on Sabbath. Buy the ticket, take the ride.

As ghost stories go, Lights Out couldn't be more routine and economical (the film clocks in at just 81 minutes): Sophie (Maria Bello) is an isolated and mentally unstable mother raising her young son (Gabriel Bateman as Martin) alone in a big, spooky house in L.A. The two of them are stalked in the dark by a jealous, murderous specter — the same specter that once terrorized Sophie's older daughter, Rebecca (Teresa Palmer), a grungy twentysomething with a serious case of attachment disorder.

When Rebecca learns that her little brother is in peril, she returns home to confront this specter, a sort of Edward Gorey-looking black ghoul forever materializing in the shadows and disappearing in the light.

The film contains more jumps and jerks than a Taser demo, and in this it well satisfies the rudest obligations of the genre. No opportunity to startle is wasted, and Sandberg's direction is swift and sophisticated enough to keep the frights from feeling completely cold and mercenary. It's a rollercoaster, sure, but a really good one.

What really elevates Lights Out above the lumpen slew of cheaper offerings in the fright game, however, is the cast. Bello, who plays broken as well as anyone in Hollywood, is excellent as a ravaged mother torn between the sick narcissism of her solitude and her maternal instinct to protect her children.

As a daughter grieving the loss of her childhood and resentful over her filial abandonment by a mother with an unhealthy attachment to the supernatural, Palmer is a fierce secular force; she wears her fear and anger like armor, and the complicated emotions that play across the bitten features of her Raphaelite face give the movie a depth it would otherwise lack.

It's been a good couple of years for scary movies, and Lights Out — though hardly in the same league as, say, The Babadook or this year's best movie, The Witch — fits neatly into a trend that seems to be speaking to a lot of horror directors these days. That trend is just an anxious, Freudian honing of the ancient idea that the sins of the father are visited upon the son; moms and daughters are not immune. This movie only skirts the jittery surface of this maternal anxiety, but it does so with an urgency that's undeniable. (Regal Valley River, Cinemark 17, opens Friday, Aug. 19, at Broadway Metro)

MOLDING MOUNT OLYMPUS

Mike Leckie was lugging an armful of his hand-cast sculptures of athlete Ashton Eaton up the stairs at the 2012 Olympic Trials at Hayward Field when someone from above offered him a hand.

It was Eaton himself, the new world-champion decathlon runner. Oddly enough, Leckie was bringing the sculptures up the stairs as a gift to Eaton and his mother for the racer's new 2012 world record.

"Ashton happens to be there. He says, 'Oh, do you need help?'" Leckie recalls. "The world record holder in the decathlon comes down the stairs, carries cardboard boxes up with me — they are the nicest people in the world."

Leckie can wildly gesture his way through story after story of working with competitors at the Olympic Trials because he's sculpted athletes for the past three trails (2008, 2012 and 2016), selling his beautiful, white bas-relief sculptures at a booth at Hayward Field.

There's the time in 2012 when he was sculpting a photo of world-record high jumper Jesse Williams and his, ahem, family jewels, captured just as the high-flying athlete bounced over the bar in his spunkies. Leckie holds up the sculpture he made of Williams arching over the bar on the jump that earned him the world record that year.

"I called him and said, 'Jesse, what do you want to do with this dick bump?'" Leckie says. Williams responded: "You put a guy in spandex, that's what you get."

A typical bas-relief sculpture at Leckie's Olympic Trials booth measures 12 by 18 inches and is made of a white plaster-cement substance called hydrostone.

Leckie hand-builds and hand-pours each sculpture at his home, reinforcing the somewhat fragile hydrostone with a grid of wire that is sunken into the plaster while wet.

The studio is still spotted with castings of Olympic athletes because, as Leckie says, this year was his best yet. His historic bestsellers are a 1989 piece of the Greek discus thrower Myron and, of course, a sweeping piece of the east grandstands of Hayward Field.

Leckie says he's managed to meet several Olympians at the trials over the years by guessing — before seeing them — who was walking into his booth by their physical characteristics.

"Mostly, you can guess," he says. "It's the way they move. They're Olympic athletes. They are a little different from the rest of us. It's just the truth. It's awareness of their bodies. They're aware of where their body is in space."

Leckie met world-champion discus thrower Mac Wilkins when he walked into his booth of sculptures in 2008.

"I did a piece for him" Leckie says of Wilkins, who won the gold medal at the World Championships in 1976. "When I met him, he had just started working in Portland in Concordia University."

Wilkins asked Leckie to do a bas-relief sculpture of his younger self throwing the discus.

"He hired me to do it," he says. "We worked together extensively on it. That's how I got to know him so well."

He holds up a new selfie he took with Wilkins on his phone at the trials this year. The three-time discus champion stands a foot taller than the shorter, smaller-framed sculptor.

"Look how big his head is compared to mine," Leckie says.

The corners of Leckie's house in Fox Hollow look like a dragon's den, with piles of lustrous purple and sea-green chunks of stone everywhere. It's mostly Chinese fluorite, but there is also green verdite from Zimbabwe and cloudy blue calcite chunks the size of a football.

The mountains of sparkling stone continue up into the kitchen and trail out the side of the house, forming more gleaming heaps of treasure in the carport. The sculptor uses these softer limestone pieces to make smaller figurines.

His latest work-in-progress sits in the middle of his kitchen (almost blocking the sink). It's a bronze statue of Chief Joseph's face, half-finished. A bowl of fresh sweet pea blossoms at the base, along with a chocolate bar, as a tribute to the late Native American leader.

Now that the trials are done and the Olympics themselves are underway, Leckie says it's time to turn his attention to works like Chief Joseph and the many glittering stones waiting to be molded in his home. ■

SEATTLE SLUDGE REVIVAL

Sometimes a band's strength lies not in its particular sound but in each player's ability to unite fully behind the sound, to present a single battlefront, to commit individual expression to one common purpose — to communicate, combust and even, at times, self-immolate as a whole. Hard-hitting Seattle trio So Pitted does just that on its impressive Sub Pop Records debut Neo. Guitarist-vocalist Nathan Rodriguez tells EW his band is “very much a punk band” in the vein of Bleach-era Nirvana. Neo's sound also references the myriad side projects of legendary producer and musician Steve Albini.

And Rodriguez even cites the unlikely influence of Janet Jackson and what he calls the “hard, industrial R&B” of the new jack-swing era. Each member of So Pitted has “different ideas of what a song can sound like,” Rodriguez explains, but the final product is sludgy, grimy, brutal and doomy with a sly wink, as if to say, “Look out: We’ve arrived to tear shit up and have fun while doing it.” Guitarist Jeannine Koewler supplies guitar lines on a nasty low-end, acting almost like a bass. Drummer and vocalist Liam Downey is a passionate lover behind the kit. So Pitted are most formidable when Koewler and Downey lock together in mosh-inducing, militaristic grooves, such as on “Holding the Void.” Throughout, Rodriguez gulps, gargles and barks like a young Kurt Cobain, somehow always managing to stay tuneful. Rodriguez says signing to Sub Pop still “has a lot of prestige in this [Seattle] area.” He adds quickly that So Pitted is still a small band, committed to the DIY ethos of all-ages venues like The Boreal, where So Pitted play this time through Eugene. Rodriguez says he discovered music in venues like The Boreal, which unfortunately have become all too rare around Seattle. So Pitted plays alongside Chastity Belt, VCR and iLee 7 pm Tuesday, Aug. 23, at The Boreal; $10, all ages. — William Kennedy

ALL HAIL THE MELANCHOLY DANE

Timothy McIntosh takes the lead in Cottage Theatre's excellent production of Hamlet

TRACY NYGARD AND TIMOTHY MCINTOSH IN HAMLET

As an accidental theater critic for the past 15 years or so, first in Seattle and now in Eugene, I've had the great good fortune to see Shakespeare performed in a variety of ways and in a variety of settings, professional and otherwise. Often upon the stage it's just a poor player strutting and fretting, signifying very little, yet other times the work is divine beyond all reason. I've seen the infinite riches of Hamlet flattened to a pulp in the unventilated August swelter of a third-floor studio, and I once watched a flamboyant young actor embody Iago with such malignant glee that I never wanted to see Othello again, it was so perfect.

This is precisely why I love theater; like life, the art of the stage is spontaneous, impermanent and as prone to spells of damnation as bursts of grace. Unlike the more static arts, live theater contains an inherent risk that is thrilling, and when it goes off well, it's truly wild and magical — a brief but glorious moment in time that leaves only a diminishing echo of itself, never to be repeated. And being true of all plays, this is exponentially true of Shakespeare.

All of which is to say that Cottage Theatre has one of those glorious moments on its hands right now. Directed by Tony Rust, VLT's production of Hamlet is as good as anything you're likely to see from a community theater anywhere, thanks in no small part to the lead performance of Timothy A. McIntosh. McIntosh, a playwright and professor at Eugene's Gutenberg College, imbues the melancholy Dane with an energy that is at once thoroughly modern and utterly orthodox.

Whereas so many contemporary actors encounter difficulty with Shakespeare's poetic tangles, being too cowed by an Elizabethan argot made exotic by time, McIntosh confidently inhabits Hamlet's words in such a way that the existential agony of the role flows outward from his performance. The soliloquies are felt rather than merely spoken. In this way, McIntosh finds not only the tragedy and dark humor in Hamlet's dilemma, but he gives that dilemma a physical urgency that speaks volumes.

Of course, none of the expert naturalism of McIntosh's performance would be half so effective if he weren't well directed and surrounded by a cast and environment to match his efforts. Rust, a veteran of local theater, seems to understand this, and as director he gives Hamlet ample room to rave and move about, right down to the simple stage design, which is economical and utterly abstract, as though sprung from the imagination of Fritz Lang.

It's no knock on the large cast to note that every actor seem elevated by the lead performance, a fact especially evident in the way the tension takes a slight dip whenever McIntosh is offstage — this is, after all, Hamlet's tragedy, and he is something of a narcissistic prick, pulling everyone into his obsessive orbit. In a roomful of good performances, then, two of the play's earliest victims are especially noteworthy: Patrick Torelle is just right as Polonius, and Martha Benson brings a chilling immediacy to the final stages of Ophelia's collapse.

Perhaps the highest praise I can give to Cottage Theatre's production of Hamlet is this: In a play where we all know that in the end (OK, spoiler alert) everyone dies, I was yet sitting on edge of my seat, completely rapt in my attention to the vagaries and convulsions of a freaky, suicidal young man struggling to overcome a paralysis of mind. I was alive to every word. I felt it to my bones.

Not only is such a Hamlet rare in the realm of community theater. It's rare period. ■

Hamlet runs through Aug. 18 at Cottage Theatre in Cottage Grove; $15-$20, tickets at cottagetheatre.org or 541-942-8001

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Can you imagine feeling at home in the world no matter where you are? If you eventually master this art, outer circumstances won't distort your relationship with yourself. No matter how crazy or chaotic the people around you might be, you will remain rooted in your unshakable sense of purpose; you will respond to any given situation in ways that make you both calm and alert, amused and curious, compassionate for the suffering of others and determined to do what's best for you. If you think these are goals worth seeking, you can make dramatic progress toward them in the coming weeks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): As I tried to meditate on your horoscope, my next-door neighbor was wielding a weed-whacker to trim her lawn and the voices in my head were shouting extra loud. So I decided to drive down to the marsh to get some high-quality silence. When I arrived at the trail head, I found an older man in ragged clothes leaning against the fence. Nearby was a grocery cart full of what I assumed were all his earthly belongings. "Doing nothing is a very difficult art," he croaked as I slipped by him, "because you're never really sure when you are done." I immediately recognized that his wisdom might be useful to you. You are, after all, in the last few days of your recharging process. It's still a good idea for you to lie low and be extra calm and vegetate luxuriously. But when should you rise up and leap into action again? Here's my guess: Get one more dose of intense stillness and silence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): My readers have a range of approaches for working with the counsel I offer. Some study the horoscopes for both their sun signs and rising signs, then create do-it-yourself blends of the two. Others prefer to wait until the week is over before consulting what I've written. They don't want my oracles to influence their future behavior, but enjoy evaluating their recent past in light of my analysis. Then there are the folks who read all 12 of my horoscopes. They refuse to be hemmed in by just one forecast and want to be free to explore multiple options. I encourage you to try experiments like these in the coming days. The moment is ripe to cultivate more of your own unique strategies for using and interpreting the information you absorb — both from me and from everyone else you listen to.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Have you been drinking a lot of liquids? Are you spending extra time soaking in hot baths and swimming in bodies of water that rejuvenate you? Have you been opening your soul to raw truths that dissolve your fixations and to beauty that makes you cry and to love that moves you to sing? I hope you're reverently attending to these fluidic needs. I hope you're giving your deepest yearnings free play and your freshest emotions lots of room to unfold. Smart, well-lubricated intimacy is a luxurious necessity, my dear. Stay very, very wet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): In my opinion, you need to bask in the glorious fury of at least one brainstorm — preferably multiple brainstorms over the course of the next two weeks. What can you do to ensure that happens? How might you generate a flood of new ideas about how to live your life and understand the nature of reality? Here are some suggestions: Read books about creativity. Hang around with original thinkers and sly provocateurs. Insert yourself into situations that will strip you of your boring certainties. And take this vow: "I hereby unleash the primal power of my liberated imagination."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): When you were a child, did you play with imaginary friends? During your adolescence, did you nurture a fantasy relationship with a pretend boyfriend or girlfriend? Since you reached adulthood, have you ever enjoyed consorting with muses or guardian angels or ancestral spirits? If you answered yes to any of those questions, you are in a good position to take full advantage of the subtle opportunities and cryptic invitations that are coming your way. Unexpected sources are poised to provide unlikely inspirations in unprecedented ways.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): When you were born, you already carried the seeds of gifts you would someday be able to provide — specific influences or teachings or blessings that only you, of all the people who have ever lived, could offer the world. How are you doing in your quest to fulfill this potential? Here's what I suspect: Your seeds have been ripening slowly and surely. But in the coming months, they could ripen at a more rapid pace. Whether they actually do or not may depend on your willingness to take on more responsibilities — interesting responsibilities, to be sure — but bigger than you're used to.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): I suspect that you will soon be culminating a labor of love you've been nurturing and refining for many moons. How should you celebrate? Maybe with some champagne and caviar? If you'd like to include bubbly in your revels, a good choice might be 2004 Belle Epoque Rose. Its floral aroma and crispy mouth-feel rouse a sense of jubilation as they synergize the flavors of blood orange, pomegranate and strawberry. As for caviar: Consider the smooth, aromatic and elegant roe of the albino beluga sturgeon from the unpolluted areas of the Caspian Sea near Iran. But before I finish this oracle, let me also add that a better way to honor your accomplishment might be to take the money you'd spend on champagne and caviar and instead use it as seed money for your next big project.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Some species of weeds become even more robust and entrenched as they develop resistances to the pesticides that are designed to eradicate them. This is one example of how fighting a problem can make the problem worse — especially if you attack too furiously or use the wrong weapons. I invite you to consider the possibility that this might be a useful metaphor for you to contemplate in the coming weeks. Your desire to solve a knotty dilemma or shed a bad influence is admirable. Just make sure you choose a strategy that actually works.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your assignment, if you choose to accept it, is to compose an essay on at least one of the following themes: 1. "How I Fed and Fed My Demons Until They Gorged Themselves to Death." 2. "How I Exploited My Nightmares in Ways That Made Me Smarter and Cuter." 3. "How I Quietly and Heroically Transformed a Sticky Problem into a Sleek Opportunity." 4. "How I Helped Myself by Helping Other People." For extra credit, Capricorn — and to earn the right to trade an unholy duty for a holy one — write about all four subjects.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): I suspect that in the coming months you will be drawn to wandering through the frontiers and exploring the unknown. Experimentation will come naturally. Places and situations you have previously considered to be off-limits may be downright comfortable. In fact, it's possible that you will have to escape your safety zones in order to fully be yourself. Got all that? Now here's the kicker. In the coming weeks, everything I just described will be especially apropos for your closest relationships. Are you interested in redefining and reconfiguring the ways that togetherness works for you?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): If you're playing the card game known as bridge, you're lucky if you are dealt a hand that has no cards of a particular suit. This enables you, right from the beginning, to capture tricks using the trump suit. In other words, the lack of a certain resource gives you a distinct advantage. Let's apply this metaphor to your immediate future, Pisces. I'm guessing that you will benefit from what may seem to be an inadequacy or deficit. An absence will be a useful asset.

HOMEWORK: What's the situation in your life where it's hardest for you to be loving? Practice being a master of compassion there in the coming week.

Miss Kitty is a shy but affectionate lady. She has a bit of an independent streak, but that doesn't stop her from enjoying the attention she deserves. She is a calm and quiet, and is looking for a home that has a lot of the same. She loves to explore the outdoors and enjoys sitting in a loved one's lap while getting groomed. Miss Kitty is used to being the only animal in the house and would prefer for it to stay that way. That's okay, though, because she has plenty of affection to give. If you think Miss Kitty would fit well in your home, come down to Greenhill and say hello.

SAVAGE LOVE

ALL I EVER WANTED

BY DAN SAVAGE

DEAR READERS: I'm on vacation for three weeks—but you won't be reading old columns in my absence, and you won't be reading columns by anyone who isn't Dan Savage. You'll be reading new columns, all of them written by Dan Savage, none of them written by me.

Our second guest Dan Savage is 32 years old, single, and living in London. Dan Savage got his professional start working in promotions at the legendary London nightclub G-A-Y. He's now 10 years into a career in theater arts marketing and currently works for some of the West End's biggest hit musicals. Dan has never written a sex-advice column before, but he occasionally gets angry tweets that were meant for me.

A quick word about qualifications: Advice is defined as "an opinion about what could or should be done." We're all entitled to our opinions—but only Dan Savage, theatrical marketing exec, is entitled to share his opinions in my column this week. Take it away, Dan!

I'm an early-30s bi woman. As I have more relationships, I have started to see a pattern in that I find sex much hotter when there is some degree of confusion or forbidden-ness. So relationship sex can get boring quickly. I know there's not necessarily a good answer for why, but any suggestions on what to do about this? I want to have great sex with a partner for life! Maybe my expectations about good sex in a long-term relationship are unrealistic? I know it's not always going to be crazy passion, but how can I sustain amazing sex in a relationship?

Passion Fades From This

A problem you and I share! The fun is in the chase, the excitement of someone new, and that first time. You may return for a second or maybe a third time—but then what or who is next? Often regardless of whatever feelings may have started to develop.

For those who don't understand, just imagine we're talking about food. You like food. You like lots of different types of food. Right now, your favorite food is hot dogs. But you don't want to eat that every day. Occasionally, you might want an all-you-can-eat sushi buffet.

I believe the secret to a good relationship—besides love and passion—is keeping it downright dirty! It's about keeping that spark alive. If the fun starts to fade, spice it up with toys, games, risky locations, additional people, rubber dog masks—you can't know what will excite you both until you give it a try! But that's the key, that you both like it.

There are millions of people all over the world in long-term relationships that on the face of it maintain a fun and healthy sex life—can it really be that hard? Or maybe long-term relationships aren't for you, PFFT!

I am a 65-year-old male new to gay relationships. I placed a listing on SilverDaddies and have had a LOT of responses from great young guys. I have met only one guy so far. He is 23 and says he has had only a few girlfriends and has not had any gay experiences. He is so passionate. Very oral. Long kissing sessions, and he puts his tongue EVERYWHERE. Very submissive and insatiable. Of course I use condoms. I asked him what he gets out of this. He said he gets an intensity he can't explain over pleasing an older man that he doesn't get from sex with a female. Being a sub makes him rock hard, and with a woman, he has to be the performer. He considers himself straight, since he is attracted only to older men and is only a bottom. In any case, he will be back at grad school soon, and I will no doubt have another partner. I have never had an STD. I don't want to get one now. I talked to a clinic over the phone about getting the HPV vaccine, and they thought it was funny and would not do it. I will be seeing young guys who are sexually active, so I think I should be able to get this vaccine. I do not want cold sores or warts or whatever at my age.

This Old Pop

I think it's great—if you don't mind me saying—that in your advanced years you are able to embark on this new sexual adventure and experimentation, TOP! And you have a hot 23-year-old visiting you for regular sex—something a lot of people much younger than you would kill for!

As long as you are safe and wear a condom, you shouldn't put too much stress on yourself regarding STIs. Maybe just don't go around picking up boys off street corners who look like they need a good wash.

My personal opinion is this guy may not be being as honest with you as you'd have hoped. A 23-year-old straight guy, in his first homosexual encounter, being "very oral" and "only a bottom" and putting "his tongue everywhere"—that sounds to me like someone who knows what they're doing. My experience of first times is generally a quick fumble and an even quicker ejaculation.

Regardless, he is soon to leave, TOP, and you will find a new sexual partner. Advice from a YoungTOP to an OldTOP: Go with the flow and be safe, but most of all enjoy it! (And to older gay gentlemen who think you can't get any: TOP is! You can!)

I am 39 years old and my husband is 51; we have been together nine years and married four. This morning, he was jacking off on my arse during foreplay and watching porn on his phone, which is not unusual. The problem is when I looked to see what he was watching (we often watch porn together), he got a little mad. I let it go, but when he got in the shower, I looked at his phone and saw that he was watching gay porn. MEN. I don't think I have a problem with that, but it kind of threw me. Should I be worried that he is secretly on the down low? Or does he just like to look at gay porn occasionally? When I'm giving him a blowjob, he also enjoys me licking his arse. I don't know how to confront him with what I have seen on his phone?

Perspiring Over Relationship Now

People look at all sorts of things online and are turned on by others. Man-on-man porn clearly does it for your man, or maybe this was the first time that he'd looked. Either way, the fact that he was doing this secretly while humped over your naked body and jacking off onto your arse is wrong. And he knows that: He hid the phone!

Rather than confronting him and creating a massive issue, why not suggest that you watch gay porn together. See what happens? If he is hiding the fact he's gay or bi, I'd be surprised that he'd blatantly flaunt it like this... perhaps he wanted you to catch him? He wants you to know what else he's into but doesn't know how to tell you?

Although it's rarely spoken about, a lot of straight men like the odd finger or tongue in the bum. It's not a sign of homosexuality! Maybe this could be taken further? You could go all out and strap one on and dominate him like a bitch!
